The Université du Québec à Trois-Rivières (UQTR) offers its 14,000 students a quiet, pleasant environment including a large campus with plenty of green open spaces. It also assures them a first-rate education through the dedication and specialized skills of the professors and the availability of advanced techniques. At UQTR, learning and research involve the same hard work as anywhere else - but under far more pleasant conditions. One of the university's most attractive features is its relaxed, informal atmosphere where students and professors work closely together during teaching and research activities.

For the students who don't speak French, it is possible to register at the École Internationale de Français, a French immersion school of the UQTR. A short class with the ÉIF will help them to integrate into their other classes.

RESEARCH : A TOP PRIORITY

UQTR is strongly committed to excellence in research. Research teams are grouped into some 56 units working in small business administration, lignocellulosic materials, membrane biotechnology, photobiophysics, industrial electronics, dielectrics and molecular oncology.

The Hydrogen Institute, the only one of its kind in the province of Quebec, has as its goal the development of scientific and technological knowledge concerning the storage, transportation and safe utilization of hydrogen.
